

Disclosure Statement of Diego Daruich for “Macroeconomic Implications of Uniform Pricing”

During the time this paper was written, Daruich was a graduate student at New York University, an economist at the Federal Reserve Bank of St Louis, and an Assistant Professor at the University of Southern California (Marshall). No request for prior review is associated with this position and the universities do not have policy positions, goals, or financial interests relate to the article.

The views expressed in this paper are solely our responsibility and should not be interpreted as reflecting the views of the Federal Reserve System or the Federal Reserve Bank of St. Louis.

No other party had the right to review the paper before submission.