

Disclosure Statement

I, Andrzej Baranski, declare that there are no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

All data was collected from human subjects and experiments have been approved by the IRB at Ohio State.

Funding for this research has been provided by the Behavioral Decision Making Initiative at Ohio State and the Journal of Money, Credit and Banking.

Acknowledgements for helpful advice from other economists in pursuing this project are available at the bottom of the title page of my paper. These include my dissertation co-advisors James Peck and John H. Kagel. Paul J. Healy also offered suggestions along the development of the paper. Katie Coffman also offered helpful advice and read over an earlier version of my manuscript. A conversation with Husseyin Yildirim is gratefully acknowledged also.