

Disclosure Statement for “The Welfare Effects of Coordinated Assignment: Evidence from the New York City High School Match”

Atila Abdulkadiroglu, Nikhil Agarwal and Parag Pathak

The authors declare that they have no relevant or material financial interests that relate to the research described in this paper.

Pathak and Agarwal gratefully acknowledge support from the National Science Foundation and the Alfred Sloan Foundation. Pathak and Abdulkadiroglu are on the Scientific Advisory Board of the Institute for Innovation in Public School Choice.

The data were obtained from the New York City Public School District under a Data Use Agreement, which did not give the district rights to review the findings of this paper. The agreement is available on request.

Approval from Institutional Review Boards at Duke and the National Bureau of Economic Research was obtained for this research. The approval notices are available on request.