

Men and Women in Principles of Economics Textbooks

*By BETSEY STEVENSON AND HANNA ZLOTNICK **

Disclosure Statement Hanna Zlotnick

IRB approval was not required for the project as no human subjects were involved; data involved public information. This research was written in my role as a student at the University of Michigan. No specific financial support was involved.

Over the past three years, Zlotnick worked as a research assistant at the University of Michigan for Martha Bailey on a project regarding increasing gender inclusion at the University.

Disclosure Statement Betsey Stevenson

IRB approval was not required for the project as no human subjects were involved. This research was written in my role as an associate professor of economics and public policy at the University of Michigan. No specific financial support was involved.

Over the past three years, Stevenson has been working to produce a Principles of Economics textbook and is under contract with Macmillan for the publication of this textbook. As a result, she has received payments exceeding $10,000 from Macmillan for the production of this textbook. She included a leading principles of economics textbook from Macmillan in the analysis as it met the criteria for selection. Finally, Stevenson is on the executive committee of the American Economic Association.